Abstract

In order to retain and excite more students in computer science, we introduced robots in our introductory programming class. The robots not only add another exciting application of computing to the class, but are intended to make abstract concepts more concrete. We discuss additional applications of computing that might be adopted in the class to encourage engagement and motivation.