Request: Add

This is an eMajor class approved by the consortium as an elective for CRJU majors. It provides a perspective on constitutional law for practical applications in civil rights, civil liberties, courts, criminal procedure, and equal protection. This class should have been submitted in 2021 with the program request but was not submitted at that time.

Honors Course Conversion Grading Procedure

The Honors Faculty Council approved updates to the process (shown below) by which "regular" courses are converted to "Honors" courses. The updated process changes two elements related to the additional work that an Honors student "contracts" with the professor/instructor to do in order to turn the course into an Honors course.

Change the terms for Honors course conversion as follows:

| Additional assignment/work | Current  | Change   |
|----------------------------|--|--|
| Grading and Syllabus       | Must constitute some percentage of the course grade. Thus, Honors conversion alters the syllabus for the course. | Is graded pass/fail and does not affect the student's percentage in the course and letter grade.Thus, Honors conversion does not alter the syllabus for the course.   |
| Assignment Options         | Determined by the course instructor. There are minimal guidelines and no established standards.                  | Options are provided on the contractual form (e.g. at least six options, including research paper, applied and/or creative projects, short papers, additional presentation), along with guidelines and standards that the Honors Faculty Council is establishing with minimal/maximal standards, e.g. page counts. |

The Honors College is making this change: (1) To reduce the burden of course conversion for instructors that arises from having to alter the syllabus and (2) to establish consistency across course conversions through which students earn Honors distinction, e.g. to avoid one student completing a two-page paper for a successful conversion and another, in another instructor's course, completing a 30-page paper for a successful conversion.
